MY STORY

One of my employees, Prabhjot Singh, has migrated to Canada recently. When he joined one year back, he was a frail, diminutive, unimpressive male nurse. When he left, I found him unforgettable.

Prabhjot taught me three things. Number one; discipline. He characterized his form of discipline as 'the work you do which you don't want to do and you know that you should have done it.' Prabhjot has a very strong conviction which made him continue his commitments, through thick and thin. For all unfinished works, he used to silently promise, "I'll try again tomorrow."

He always flowed with the flow; said 'yes' to life. When you say yes, you listen 'yes' too. When you say 'no,' you get another 'no.' He said 'yes' to almost all works and ensured precise, timely delivery. Whenever the work was beyond his reach, he clearly said so. Prabhjot never did a 'job.' He worked.

Prabhjot epitomized 'multi-tasking.' He exemplified that no single talent is sufficient to either make your presence marked or your absence felt. All along his stay, he learned, unlearned and relearned, albeit retaining his values. He challenged himself, re-invented himself and made his absence felt.

I believe, he is more successful than me. And this is because he always carried a graceful lady on his bike-back; sometimes along with his wife too. It was a fine balance. Many times, he himself was not aware of that lady riding on his head.

In my imagination, that lady was "Sadbhavna."

This young man never taught me. He made me learn. And that's why, became unforgettable.
